Nieuwe regels om het Brugse Belfort te beklimmen

De honderden monumenten die Brugge rijk is, zijn imposant, uniek én muurvast. Ze draaien al enkele eeuwen mee op hoog niveau en maken van Brugge een van de best bewaarde middeleeuwse steden ter wereld. Zelfs het 83 meter hoge Belfort uit 1240 houdt goed stand. Al moet je er wel wat voor over hebben om van het spectaculaire uitzicht over de stad te genieten ...

With its canals and its typically mediaeval architecture, Bruges is a truly delightful city, and an excellent destination for a change of scene, less than 3 hours from Paris by train. We spent a weekend there at the end of October. It was a chance to get away from the crowds, without having to worry about cold weather.

It's an easy enough journey - a couple of hours to Brussels on the Eurostar and then an hour by train (there's one every twenty minutes or so) to Bruges. And, once in the City, it's somewhere you can easily explore on foot.

You cannot know a city properly until you have worn out a pair of shoes visiting it.

My first thought after arriving in Bruges was definitely this one: “the topic of modern architecture is not typical for Bruges. But is it really so?”
